

Feilden Clegg Bradley Studios

Ethical Policy

FCBS is committed to being a good corporate citizen and making a positive contribution to society through participation in the communities in which we operate and the wider business community of which we are a part.

We are committed to ensuring that our work is carried out in accordance with rigorous ethical, professional and legal standards.

We believe that progressive architecture, founded on the principles of humanistic modernism, has a positive influence on the social and environmental aspects of our lives and we recognise the substantial impact that the activity of architecture has on a wider society. Environmental impact is a major aspect of this but we also consider the wider impact of our schemes in terms of the quality of spaces they create for people.

Equally, we have a commitment to our other stakeholders: our employees, our local community, our suppliers, partners, contractors, consultants and clients – and, through our environmental and social agendas, the wider world.

We are committed to ensuring a significant section of our workload is devoted to social and community projects, both in the UK and overseas.

We seek out clients, consultants and suppliers who share our values – we actively encourage their equal commitment.

We put a priority on our research work and seek ways of sharing our findings with the wider community.

The Partners formally acknowledge responsibility for the governance of ethical and CSR issues and have established effective management structures and systems to ensure that this responsibility is effectively exercised.